3. Journey to Justice – Lessons from New Zealand – Alameda Cohort	- The Alameda County delegation visited New Zealand to study the country's juvenile justice system. - A presentation, "Journey to Justice: Alameda County to New Zealand," highlighted the delegation's experience, lessons learned, and key takeaways. - Three proposed initiatives inspired by the trip were outlined: - Expansion of the Transition Center into a Success Center - Execution of the Youth Violence Reduction Coordination Team (YVRC). Pilot to begin in Oakland (where most of JJC youth reside) before possible expansion to other Alameda Counties - Develop Ubuntu Justice Initiative - Funding and sustainability of these initiatives were discussed.

AGENDA	DISCUSSION	ACTION
Committee Questions/Comments	Will the initiative serve only youth on probation, or both those on and off probation? This is still being determined. Can we review the Oranga Tamariki Act (1989, New Zealand) referenced as comparable to California’s Welfare and Institution Code? Yes, it's available online at Legislation.govt.nz Under Welfare and Institutions Code, what autonomy does the county have to do something that’s really innovative, that is within the boundaries of the law? Innovative approaches can be piloted locally and potentially inspire broader adoption. Does this body have the authority to support and sustain these ideas, especially in light of legislative constraints? Yes, within defined scope, JJCC can recommend initiatives through its annual plan; funding may come from existing grants, but final approval rests with the Board of Supervisors. Will there be barriers or opportunities to think differently about the populations being served? Yes, diversion opportunities exist for most youth, except for certain serious offenses such as (707(b)). In what way will YVRC address the issue of overrepresentation among groups receiving services? YVRC will strengthen community-based organizations’ ability to deliver contracted services. How are the kids already in custody going to benefit from this? The youth in custody will indirectly benefit through YVRC’s coordination of safety planning for high-risk youth in community. Motion made by Brian Ford for the body to adopt the ideas presented and move them forward to the subcommittee for continued review and discussion. Motion seconded by Elisa Márquez. Motion carries.
